What is a biometric screening?

Biometric screenings are clinical health assessments used to measure key aspects of an individual's health. Biometric screenings can identify early onset of various health conditions including high cholesterol and diabetes as well as individuals at risk of serious health complications such as cancer and heart attacks. Biometric screenings are becoming a vital aspect to employer wellness programs and are often paired with incentive programs, referrals to health coaching, and a positive work-life balance.

Who are biometric screening for?

Participants of screenings are determined at the employer's discretion and may include spouses and dependents.

Why use biometric screening?

When properly integrated with a corporate wellness plan, screenings can help reduce health risks, improve health status, reduce health care costs, and improve productivity and performance of the workforce.
